Dear Marriott:

I have already replied to the suggestion in your letter of 23 July 1952 that the next Committee meeting be held in November. You indicate that between the middle of November and the beginning of December is under consideration, and I would like to point out at this time that we have our national elections in the first part of November, which I think might be a more interesting time for you to make your trip. [redacted] has said that either early or late November will be entirely satisfactory to him.

As for the agenda, we have no new problems of any stature but will wish to review some of the matters which we have discussed before. As you probably know, most of our joint problems are perennial and do not allow long-term settlements. They should, however, be reviewed each year and mutual understandings reached so that our individual planning can be approached with due respect to the plans of the other.

I should like to have a little more time to consider which problems we feel will need preparation, both by you and by us, for discussion and will advise you at an early date as to our proposed agenda.

Sincerely,

[redacted]
